

Know Your Church . . . Laity Formation

Christian East in general, Baptism forms one integrated rite of initiation that is celebrated together with Chrismation (what the west calls Confirmation) and Eucharist. This is the order of the sacraments as traditionally held in the Church where the Eucharist is the culmination and the fullness of initiation into life with Christ (see CCC 1233). Chrismation, occurring at Baptism, calls the Holy Spirit down upon the child. The children are "sealed with the gift of the Holy Spirit" with holy Chrism, a mixture of olive oil and spices prepared by the bishop and distributed to priests. This chrism is applied by the priest to the forehead, eyes, nose, mouth, ears, breasts, hands, and feet. Since Baptism and Chrismation form a single rite, deacons are not ministers of Baptism in the Christian East.

Finally, all who are newly baptized, and not just adults, receive Communion. This is the undisputed tradition of the early Church, both East and West. The Churches of the Christian East have preserved this discipline to this day. In fact, infant Communion continued even in the Latin Church in remote areas into the seventeenth century. While it is true that the practice of infant Communion fell into disuse during different periods of Church history, since the Second Vatican Council infant Communion in the Eastern Catholic Churches has re-emerged. Children are able to continue receiving the Eucharist with their parents or other adults, until they begin to confess their sins, and approach the chalice on their own. This follows the understanding that just as children are baptized on the faith of their parents and sponsors, so they too receive the Eucharist on the faith of their parents and sponsors.
